

Linda Draper

The wonder of connecting children with nature, and believing that these little ones are not only interested but capable of directing their own learning is the passion of my career as an educator of little humans.

While working with our families and our staff for the past several years, we have created a haven at this place – not only for them but an ideal place for me to come and practice the art of observation and guidance. I am so very proud of the work that we all do here, and I spend an enormous amount of time cultivating the soil within these gates – soil that is rich with the questions of children and their teachers. Soil that builds up compassion, curiosity, and the individuals desire to know more about their world, their work, and the people that they interact with.

It has been my privilege to build this place for the children, families, and teachers that walk through these doors. And I hope to be able to share this blessing with many generations to come.
